SO WHAT'S THE PROBLEM WITH POPs?

Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) are compounds that persist in the environment and are proven to cause adverse effects to the environment and health.

They are bio-accumulative, building up in the tissue of living things, and can be passed between species through the food chain or from mother to baby.

They are banned under the Stockholm Convention.

The Great DDT Muster makes it easy to get rid of these pesticides, so don't miss this chance!

In association with:

The Great DDT Muster has received funding support through the Waste Minimisation Fund, which is administered by the Ministry for the Environment.

To make a booking, visit www.thegreatDDTmuster.co.nz or call 0508 374 768

*Collection and disposal of POPs like DDT is usually costly but for a limited time funding is available to allow POPs to be collected and disposed of, at no cost to you.
